

2011 STUDY OF THE INTERNATIONAL MARKET FOR HOT COFFEE & TEA

Many countries have strong cultural attachments to either coffee or tea, yet those ties are being tested by the global economy and by the growing availability of coffee and tea products. MULTI-SPONSOR SURVEYS INTERNATIONAL, LLC conducted the 2011 Study of the International Market for Hot Coffee & Tea to examine consumption habits and preferences across four countries – UNITED KINGDOM, RUSSIA, CHINA AND JAPAN – with an emphasis on understanding beverage loyalty and willingness to experiment with new varieties and brands. Findings reported include:

Among all adult consumers:

- Overall preference for coffee vs. tea and generational differences where relevant
- Reasons for choice
- Image and perceptions of coffee and tea
- Interest in trying different varieties and types of hot coffee/hot tea among infrequent drinkers
- Change in coffee and tea consumption

Among regular hot coffee or hot tea drinkers:

- Types/varieties consumed
- Locations and occasions of use
- Ratio of at-home vs. away-from-home consumption
- Brand awareness and use
- Considerations important when selecting brand – organic, country of origin, packaging, costs, etc.

REPORT EXCERPT:

“An above average share of the coffee and tea drunk in China is consumed away from home vs. at home and between meals vs. at meals”
